The tragic news

Six unborn babies were found near the banks of Bishumati River in Kuleshwor, Kathmandu, Nepal, on Wednesday, 6 January, 2010, leading authorities to suspect of foul play by private hospitals involved in the abortion. The unborn babies were found wrapped in a polythene bag near the banks of the river. Eyewitnesses said that the fetuses could be anywhere from four to eight months. Three of them are male and two are female but a fetus' gender could not determined because of damaged. Police suspect private hospitals and clinics involved in the abortion to have disposed off the fetuses and said that they have started an investigation into the case and they have taken it as a murder case.
